PRODUCTION NOTES

The original story of APPLAUSE first appeared in Cosmopolitan Magazine (1945) entitled, The Wisdom of Eve by Mary Orr.

In 1950, Joseph L. Mankiewicz adapted the short story as the screenplay, All About Eve. This memorable film which starred Bette Davis as Margo and Anne Baxter as Eve won the Academy Award for Best Film of the Year.

The present musical version by Comden and Green is primarily based on the Mankiewicz film with substantially more emphasis on the character of Margo. "We soon realized," wrote Comden and Green "that the strength of All About Eve, so soundly conceived and executed on the screen, lay in the timelessness of its basic story. This story has a universal appeal and instant recognition which could still retain its essential quality. It is a tale of treachery, the humble underling, subtly boring from within to unseat and usurp the figure of power on the throne, told in terms of the witty, glamorous theatre star and the mousy, adoring girl from the sticks who ingratiates herself into the star's private world, and then systematically attempts to take over her career, her lover and her life."

The ambitions and machinations of Eve however, are not uniquely indigenous to the theatre. As Mankiewicz states in his book, More About All About Eve, "There are Eves afoot in every competitive stratum of our society, wherever there's a top you can get to from the bottom. Eve is everywhere."
